

St. Croix, U.S. Virgin Islands Dive Adventure 2018 February 23rd to March 1st, 2018

St. Croix is truly a hidden gem in the Caribbean. Part of the U.S. Virgin Islands, but worlds apart from the usual. . . This winter, The Brass Anchor and the liveaboard sailboat Juliet are headed to St. Croix to explore this unique, friendly, and enchanting island – both above and below the water. Departing from the Frederiksted Pier, we'll be exploring the wrecks and reefs of Butler Bay, the walls off Cane Bay, and the reefs and slopes of the northern shores of the island around the Salt River and Christiansted.

Trips begin and end at the Frederiksted Pier, which means you land, you can head to the boat, toss your clothes in your cabin and throw a tank on your back the day you arrive! If your no-fly times allow for it, at the end of the trip take a dip with a final afternoon and even a night dive at the Pier as well. This pier is beloved by many a diver, photographer, and critter lover. Ranging in depths from 10 to 60 feet, there is no lack of diversity all along the pilings. Jump off Juliet for a dive, or have some fun jumping from directly off the pier – a 20' drop, now that's a giant stride! Octopuses, seahorses, and frogfish are almost guaranteed on every dive, not to mention juvenile puffers and boxfish, tons of varieties of worms and sea slugs, and a handful of resident turtles as well.
